Commander of Monitor After Battle With Merrimac Succumbs at 80.

PROMOTED FOR BRAVERY

Returned to Merchant Marine After Retiring From Navy Service.

NEWARK, N. J., July 13 .- Capt. Edwin V. Gager, a veteran of the battle between the Monitor and the Merrimac during the civil war, died of Bright's disease in his home, 23 Brunswick street, this city, yesterday. Two months after the famous battle Capt. Gager plioted the fleet which took President Lincoln, Secretary of War Stanton and other officials to witness the attack on Norfolk, when the Merrimac was blown up by the Confederates.

Born in Dutchess county, New York, October 14, 1833, Capt. Gager went to New York when he was 14 years old and entered the merchant marine service, following the life of a seaman until he was retired in 1903. He was part owner and commander of the private ship Monticello when the war broke out. The essel was offered to the Government and he was commissioned as master. The boat was equipped as a man-o'-war and took part in some of the early naval engagements. Later Capt. Gager was assigned to blockade duty at Charleston, Savannah and Wilmington, and for his bravery was appointed officer of deck on the Monitor's volunteer crew. After the battle with the Merrimac he was elevated to acting master on the Monitor and commanded master on the Monitor and commanded the vessel in all its subsequent manœuvres. After leaving the navy Capt. Gager returned to the merchant marine in the service of the Southern Pacific Steamship Company, with which he remained until he retired. He was known as commodore-captain and was in command of the Proteus running between New York and New Orleans.

He leaves his wife, two sons and three daughters. The funeral will be held Wednesday afternoon.

Townley, 72 years old, died early this morning after an illness of six weeks. He was a native of this city. He served engaged in the grocery business, but for the last fifteen years he had been general collector for the Central Railroad of New Jersey.
